

The White Birches' leaf buds are about to open

Early Spring 2022 in Nottingham

Steve Soreff, MD

Officially on Sunday, March 20, 2022, Spring began. By late April, green was venturing out, buds were ready to burst into leaves, Pawtuckaway Lake filled, the loons had returned to the lake, bushes were blooming, in the garden, biennials were growing, the birds chirping and in the woods, the moss was glowing green. Here of a pictorial review of my neighborhood in April.

In a sea of dead leaves, green appears

The vivid green of the moss almost glows in the sunlight

Throughout the woods, leaf buds are about to burst into leaves

Along the roads, the forsythia and other bushes are blooming

And back in the garden, the rhubarb and onions are again growing

Meanwhile, the stop logs are in Dolloff Dam and Pawtuckaway Lake has filled so our two flamingos are back in the water after a winter on dry land

And the loons have returned to Pawtuckaway Lake

Welcome to Spring in my neighborhood.
